

Plans in your hand, on demand

We're trialling an application for smart devices like iPhones, iPads and Android devices that will make locating assets a convenient and paper-free experience.

Generally, when you need to locate water and sewer main assets, you can either visit our customer support counter or log on to our online Asset Web Map system and print them out.

Now, the GTWeb application will allow those with smart devices to locate water and sewer mains through a map-base or aerial photo view while on site. As well as being able to search for assets according to your current location using GPS, you can also search for an address, a sewer maintenance hole, or by an asset ID number.

Not only will this make life easier for those in the industry, it will also reduce damage to our assets.

We'll be working with industry stakeholders, such as Master Plumbers Victoria, to test the application with a view to rolling out the technology to the wider industry.

Training for the future

The importance of an apprenticeship should never be underestimated

That goes for both the practical and theoretical sides of training. That's why we're collaborating with Chisholm TAFE to support apprentices in their learning and to reflect the true nature of what is expected of them in the field.

Our guidelines and application forms will be used by plumbing instructors to help apprentices get a solid grasp of the requirements that apply when working with a water authority's assets. With this new initiative, we're aiming to make a positive contribution to the future of plumbing.
